Migration Movements in the Modern World

Lublin, April 16-17, 2026The aim of the conference:

The aim of the conference is to present research results and facilitate interdisciplinary discussions covering the issues of migration movements in the contemporary world

Proposed areas of interest:

- Theoretical and methodological issues of migration movements (including migration movement, migration, emigration, immigration, re-emigration, resettlement, refugees, and immigrant populations)
- Historical, social, cultural, religious, ethical, political, economic, and international determinants of migration movements
- The formal and legal dimensions of migration movements (national, European, and international public law)
- Assumptions of local, national, and international policies towards migration movements
- Models and initiatives for the integration of foreigners
- The impact of migration movements on the functioning of the state, region, and world
- Attitudes of citizens, social, religious, and political organizations, and social and political movements towards migration movements
- Images of migration movements and migrants in the media
- Analysis of selected migration movements in the contemporary world

Participants and publication:

We invite scientists conducting research on migration movements, broadly defined, to participate in the conference. A student and doctoral panel are also planned. The best papers will be published after they receive positive reviews
