MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

Dianne Pinderhughes
IPSA President

This edition of Participation is a special one for two reasons. It is the first edition since the start of the COVID-19 pandemic, the last one dating back to August 2019, and second, it highlights the exciting features of the first in-person World Congress of Political Science (WC) since Brisbane in 2018. Indeed, when we converge on Buenos Aires in 2023, five years will have passed since the Association last met in person at the WC. With the contemporary international framework facing such explosive issues as nationalism, populism, environmental issues, gender abuse, ethnic and racial conflict, geopolitical instabilities and the rise of completely new diseases such as Covid, it is perhaps more important than ever to engage in person on the state of the world today. The theme of the 2023 Congress, “Politics in the Age of Transboundary Crises: Vulnerability and Resilience”, is therefore timely considering how profoundly domestic and international politics have been upended by transboundary problems, including migration flows, climate change and the pandemic.

The last two years have been challenging. The pandemic first forced IPSA to postpone the 2020 WC, which was to take place in Lisbon, and then to transition the in-person event to a fully virtual congress in 2021 for the first time in IPSA’s 72-year history. In spite of the obstacles this situation brought on, the Program Chairs, Local Organizing Committee (LOC), Research Committees, Secretariat staff and volunteers from 28 different countries worked relentlessly to make the virtual WC of 2021 a huge success, becoming the second most attended WC after Madrid in 2012. I take this opportunity to thank everyone involved, including my predecessor, President Emerita Marianne Kneuer, and IPSA’s Executive Committee, which navigated their way through this extraordinary crisis.

In recent years the Association’s agenda has expanded to take into account the needs and concerns of the nations in the Global South, and to address issues of representation from outside of Europe and North America. IPSA is strongly committed to the importance of representation from the Global South, and the extensive economic and financial issues associated with the broadening of the membership, both individual and collective in the region. This is why IPSA created the Global South Solidarity Fund, in order to help scholars from these regions travel and attend the WCs. In 2020-2021, more than 800 IPSA WC participants donated to the fund, and

I would like to thank each and every one of them for their contribution to IPSA’s historical mission to support the development of political science and promote collaboration between scholars in emerging and established democracies.

At IPSA, we also aim to create an inclusive and global political science community by ensuring balanced representation in terms of region, gender, and stage of career in all of its activities. This is why, for the first time in the history of the WC, I am pleased to name an Ombudsteam composed of female and male ombudspersons for the 2023 WC. I would like to thank Prof. Lourdes Lodi from the Universidad Nacional de Rosario in Argentina, and Prof. Arkadiusz Zukowski from the University of Warmia and Mazury in Olsztyn, Poland, for agreeing to take on this important role.

The 27th WC in Buenos Aires will be an opportunity to demonstrate IPSA’s commitment to the Argentinian political science community, to all Latin American political scientists, as well as to the Global South in general. It will deepen our existing strong cooperation with the Argentine Society of Political Analysis (SAAPS) and other regional associations such as the Latin American Association of Political Science (ALACIP). We have already been working very closely with the LOC and the Program Chairs to organize a memorable Congress for you. I take this opportunity to express my sincere gratitude to the LOC Co-Chairs, Dr. Martin D’Alessandro and Prof. Maria-Laura Perera Taricco, as well as the Regional Members of the LOC for their commitment and hard work. We all look forward to welcoming you to Buenos Aires next July 2023.

MESSAGE FROM THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Kim Fontaine-Skronski
IPSA Executive Director

Since arriving at the head of IPSA's Secretariat as Executive Director in 2019, I have had the pleasure and honour to work alongside a wonderful team composed of the Secretariat staff and Executive Committee members in fulfilling IPSA's mission of advancing political science in the world and creating an inclusive and global political science community. While the COVID-19 pandemic has forced us to meet in virtual format during/over the last two years, it will be a special pleasure to see everyone again at the next World Congress of Political Science in Buenos Aires in July 2023.

The pandemic has had a great impact on IPSA's activities and an important aspect that we had to consider was how to maintain close contact and further strengthen relationships with our members. This involved finding innovative ways to keep in touch despite sanitary measures and travelling restrictions. As a result, we created the Regional Dialogues in 2020, offering our collective members an opportunity to connect virtually. This initiative was well received and brought together thirty-seven national and regional political science associations worldwide in a series of meetings to discuss such topics as the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on their activities and on IPSA services. IPSA Digital is another initiative we launched in March 2021 which created an innovative platform for dialogue as well as networking opportunities for the political science community. It offers our collective members and Research Committees free access to virtual meetings and webinar rooms for hosting conferences. I would like to thank the Secretariat team for their resilience and dedication during these past two years, which allowed us to maintain a high level of service to our members despite the challenges we faced due to the pandemic. While these new virtual services will remain active in the future, it will be good to meet again in person in Buenos Aires.

Another way to maintain close ties with our members is through this publication. Participation is a wonderful tool to promote the upcoming World Congress of Political Science. In it, you will discover the people behind the scenes: The Program Co-Chairs, who are proposing a thought-provoking theme on Transboundary Crises, particularly relevant in today's world; IPSA's Research Committees, who work tirelessly to put together a wonderful program; the Plenary Speakers, invited to present their latest research; and the Secretariat staff, whose professionalism and expertise result in offering you a successful and enriching Congress experience. I want to thank everyone involved and wish all the attendees a wonderful week of enlightened discussions at the Buenos Aires World Congress in 2023.

María Laura Perera Taricco
Co-Chair
Universidad Católica Argentina

Argentina will be hosting the IPSA World Congress of Political Science for the second time in its history in July 2023. We are very proud and feel very honoured to receive you in Buenos Aires. We also have many expectations from this new opportunity. When we hosted the World Congress in 1991, it meant a milestone in the development of political science in the country. We are sure that 2023 will be a new opportunity not only for welcoming and showing our hospitality to so many good colleagues, but also for establishing a new landmark in our careers as political scientists and as friends of the global political science community.

Argentine political science has followed a long and winding road, but it has flourished since the transition to democracy in 1983. Now we have more than 50 universities teaching political science, a strong political science association, and a vibrant and quite productive political science community. But more important, we are very close to a wider regional community of colleagues, and for that reason our Local Organizing Committee for the next IPSA World Congress is unprecedentedly composed of colleagues from five brother countries (Argentina, Mexico, Colombia, Brazil and Uruguay). Thus, this will not only be a World Congress in Argentina, but also a World Congress in Latin America. In this vein, we are sure the Buenos Aires conference will be a new opportunity for all of us in the region to show our academic potential as well as our thriving scientific reality to the global political science community.

We will be welcoming you at the Universidad Católica Argentina (UCA), ranked as one of the best private universities in the country. UCA is located in the trendy neighbourhood of Puerto Madero, full of cafés and restaurants, and walking distance from Buenos Aires' centre and other touristic areas and monuments the city has to offer (like the famous Plaza de Mayo, the Teatro Colón, or the San Telmo neighbourhood). We hope you will take this great opportunity to visit other sights of our beautiful (and very affordable!) country, like Patagonia, the Iguazú falls or the wine road in the province of Mendoza.

We invite all our fellow political scientists to reclaim the in-person exchanges that the pandemic forced us to suspend and to live unforgettable days learning and discussing with colleagues and enjoying some of our treasures, like our "asado", Malbec wine, and tango.

Again, it is a great honor for us to host you, and we will do all our best to make you feel comfortable and have an unforgettable congress.

We will be waiting for you! Welcome to Argentina!

LETTER FROM THE PROGRAM CHAIRS: MORE DIVERSE SESSIONS, EVENTS, AND THINGS TO ENJOY IN BUENOS AIRES

Euiyoung Kim
Program Co-Chair
Seoul National University

Theresa Reidy
Program Co-Chair
University College Cork

In July 2023, IPSA will welcome delegates from around the world to its 27th World Congress of Political Science in Buenos Aires, Argentina. After the difficult isolation of the acute phase of the Covid-19 pandemic, it will be a great pleasure to bring colleagues together to share vital scholarship and perhaps most importantly, to renew friendships.

Since its inception in 1950, IPSA World Congresses have engaged with, and evaluated, the most pressing concerns in national and international politics. IPSA is a pluralistic organisation open to all sub-disciplines and a diversity of methodological approaches. We hope to continue this fine tradition in 2023.

The theme of the 27th Congress is “Politics in the Age of Transboundary Crises: Vulnerability and Resilience.” Complex transboundary problems include climate change, cyber terrorism, global migration flows, financial instability and the Covid-19 pandemic, among others. These problems are transboundary in the sense that they traverse state boundaries in an era of intense global connectivity. Disruptions in one part of the world quickly move around the globe through highly integrated global networks. Transboundary issues expose the grave consequences of the tragedy of the commons as coordinated global responses are frequently inadequate and sometimes absent. Global collective action so urgently required to comprehensively manage transboundary crises is found wanting. States are challenged to manage effects on citizens and political institutions, often muddling through with vulnerabilities evident across the layers of political life. But citizens, states and the global system are also resilient.

In order to investigate, understand and contribute to academic and public debates on these complex transboundary challenges, but also opportunities, the discipline of political science needs conceptual lenses and theoretical approaches that span traditional disciplinary boundaries and cross over social, cultural, economic, religious, ethnic, sexual and linguistic delineations. Connecting theory and praxis is also important.

These perspectives and topics will be highlighted throughout the 2023 IPSA World Congress program. The twelve general sessions will welcome research from across the discipline of politics. For the first time, we have added a session on teaching and learning in political science. We look forward to seeing this vital area of research, and critical contribution of the discipline, develop and flourish in IPSA. The plenary sessions will cover the post pandemic world order, the profession of political science and as always will feature an IPSA Presidential Plenary led by Prof.

Dianne Pinderhughes as the center piece of the programme. Congress theme sessions will address migration and human mobility, climate change, governing the digital sphere and many more transboundary issues. Continuing the practice started in Brisbane, there will be a series of café sessions focused on career development, publishing and research methods. The Local Organising Committee will lead general sessions on the politics of Latin America as well as convene roundtables and a suite of intellectually stimulating panels. They have also created a wonderful selection of social and cultural events that will tempt us all to explore Argentina. Last but not least, we eagerly look forward to continuing our unique and proud tradition of IPSA Research Committee organized sessions that truly manifest the thriving global epistemic communities of IPSA.

Most importantly as Program Co-Chairs, we invite proposals for panels, roundtables and papers from our colleagues around the world. At this time of global turbulence, we especially encourage international participation and collaboration by scholars across boundaries.

We look forward to meeting you in Buenos Aires.

CONGRESS THEME

POLITICS IN THE AGE OF TRANSBOUNDARY CRISES: VULNERABILITY AND RESILIENCE

Domestic and international politics are notably challenged by complex transboundary problems that include climate change, cyber terrorism, global migration flows, financial instability and the COVID-19 pandemic, among others. These problems are transboundary in the sense that they traverse state boundaries in an era of intense global connectivity. Disruptions in one part of the world quickly move around the globe through highly integrated global networks.

Transboundary issues expose the grave consequences of the tragedy of the commons as coordinated global responses are frequently inadequate and sometimes absent. Global collective action so urgently required to comprehensively manage transboundary issues is found wanting. States are challenged to manage effects on citizens and political institutions, often muddling through with vulnerabilities evident across the layers of political life.

But citizens, states and the global system are also resilient. The international order was briefly interrupted by the freezing of politics during the COVID-19 pandemic. States sought to respond to the immediate challenges of the pandemic, yet as the early waves passed through, global politics resumed along pre-pandemic fault lines. State capacity is a crucial focus in terms of collaborative approaches among both state and non-state actors to address the so-called 'wicked' problems in the age of transboundary crises. Many governments experience 'rally around the flag' effects with sharp increases in support following the political shocks of a transboundary problem (financial crisis, political violence, natural disaster, etc.) but these effects are temporary with normal politics through citizens, social movements, political parties and leaders inevitably reasserting itself. Transboundary dynamics also create opportunities. The diffusion of debates and action on human rights and specifically on matters relating to gender equality, anti-racism and LGBT rights have benefited from global coalitions of citizens and civil society organizations.

In order to investigate, understand and contribute to academic and public debates on these complex transboundary problems and opportunities, the discipline of political science needs conceptual lenses and theoretical approaches that span traditional disciplinary boundaries and cross over social, cultural, economic, religious, ethnic, sexual and linguistic delineations. Connecting theory and praxis is also important. Transboundary approaches are called for and these might include but are not limited to interdisciplinarity, sub-field pluralism and diversity of methodological approaches. We invite proposals for panels and roundtables on topics relevant to the theme using both domestic and international analytical lenses and focusing on multiple units of analysis that include citizens, social movements, political parties, leaders, public policies, states and IOs. We especially encourage international participation and collaboration by scholars across boundaries.

THE 2023 IPSA WORLD CONGRESS OF POLITICAL SCIENCE - GENERAL SESSIONS

GS01 - Comparative Political Institutions

Session Co-Chairs: Yuko Kasuya and Pablo Pinto

For this session, we are seeking papers and panels on the theme of political institutions, both formal and informal, broadly defined. We welcome papers and panels that explore political party systems, electoral rules, the differences between presidentialism and parliamentarism, institutional rules that promote descriptive representation, and judicial institutions as well as other horizontal accountability institutions. We also welcome proposals that study informal patterns of political exchange, such as corruption, patronage, clientelism, and organized crime. Our goal is to bring together scholars who employ a variety of methodological approaches and cover different areas. Proposals can adopt inductive or deductive methods of theory formulation, qualitative or quantitative methods of empirical analysis, or any combination of these methods. Geographically, we welcome papers from around the world, whether it may be a study of a single country, a cross-national analysis, or a transboundary examination, according to the general theme of this World Congress. We intend to create panels that assemble proposals with similar themes, while maintaining methodological and regional diversity.

GS02 - International Relations

Session Chair: Ajin Choi

Over the past several decades, the field of International Relations has been challenged to expand its scope and dimension. This field persistently shed a light on state boundaries, while traditional IR continued to focus on national security and economic prosperity. And yet, the world is now witnessing the problems of non-traditional issues like climate change, non-proliferation, and extreme global inequality. Populism, nationalism, and geopolitics also threaten emerging order and cooperation. The COVID-19 pandemic crisis further highlights a new dilemma; nation-states close their borders, whereas the pandemic knows no boundaries. As we increasingly need transboundary cooperation to tackle new challenges, so it seems we are increasingly met with confrontation and divisions among traditional actors. Until now, IR scholars have been working hard to identify sources of new boundaries and alternatives to old barriers. It is time to imagine new horizons when it comes to boundaries for the global community. The International Relations session at the IPSA World Congress is seeking panel and paper submissions that address these old and new boundaries, as well as innovative proposals to employ multidisciplinary and interdisciplinary perspectives.

GS03 - Political Economy

Session Chair: Vinícius Rodrigues Vieira

Post-pandemic dynamics and growing tensions between the Euro-Atlantic bloc, formed by the United States and the European Union, and the emerging Euro-Asian sphere, which has China and Russia at its core, have triggered changes in the global political-economic arena that are likely to have lasting repercussions. In this session, we are seeking papers, panels, and roundtable proposals that address these transformations, not only from the perspective of traditional trade and finance, but also through emerging topics in political economy. This includes: the reconfiguration of global value chains; political-technological limits to addressing climate change; shifts in state–society–market relations triggered by the power of big tech; the relationship between migration and transformations in domestic political-economic institutions; the dynamic of post-globalization populism beyond advanced industrial democracies; and the return of geopolitics and its implications for governments, firms, and individuals.

While proposals may focus solely on theoretical debates, empirical evidence must be assessed through qualitative or quantitative methods. Approaches that bridge gaps across different schools of thought and/or methodological traditions are strongly encouraged, as well as unconventional comparisons between distinct cases.

GS04 - Peace and Conflict Studies

Session Chair: Timofey Agarin

Experience of conflict is foundational to our everyday interactions; contests for representative office, electoral mobilization, and political participation among citizens are impossible to imagine without disagreements on the social, economic, and cultural outcomes of governance. Though the absence of peace is often equated with conflict, Peace and Conflict Studies underline that intergroup violence is but a more virulent expression of “conflict.” Conflicts begin with micro tensions and might, but need not, evolve into out-group enmity.

Traditionally committed to exploring the origins, conditions, and consequences of strained relationships between societal groups and political institutions, Peace and Conflict Studies is home to case and comparative studies on processes and dynamics, as well as the eventual outcomes of conflicts. Increasingly, research has become more attentive to differently positioned stakeholders, as well as external, vested institutions and agents, to map out options for conflict resolution and intergroup peace. Studies of Peace and Conflict are by nature interdisciplinary and multidisciplinary, drawing on comparative politics and international studies, political sociology, and international relations to engage with existing practices of conflict and conflict transformation.

This General Session is calling for panels and papers that seek to critically assess existing theories and supplement conceptual discussions with insights from case studies. We welcome contributions that cover a broad range of sub-disciplines: extremism and violence; conflict escalation and resolution; rebel governance and mobilization; militias and military actors; states and IOs as agents of conflict or peacekeeping; civilians and political parties as peacebuilding agents; conflicts over territories, resources, and ideological hierarchies; identity and grievance driven conflicts.

GS05 - Politics of Climate Change

Session Co-Chairs: Taedong Lee and Rakhyun E. Kim

Climate change is a crisis of world politics. An unprecedented degree of intergovernmental cooperation is required to address the issue, but it has not come about. Still, new forms of climate action have emerged with various configurations of global, national, and subnational actors, policies, and institutions. These include governments declaring a state of climate emergency, NGOs instigating climate litigation, corporations taking on voluntary climate targets, experts making authoritative scientific assessments, and civil society calling for a fossil fuel non-proliferation treaty. We have also witnessed the emergence of climate backlash or volatile and contentious social-political reactions to climate policy and action. Furthermore, there are increasing concerns over the use of the climate emergency context to justify certain climate response measures (e.g., solar geoengineering) that would simply shift the problem towards other social, economic or environmental areas. Politics are very much present in all of these processes, which require urgent and widespread attention from political scientists and international relations scholars.

This General Session on climate change approaches the topic from the point of view of political science, international relations, and other relevant disciplinary and interdisciplinary perspectives. We welcome theoretical accounts and empirical analyses of key political processes observed in multi-level and transnational climate change governance networks. We also welcome critical perspectives on justice implications and prescriptions on how climate politics or governance should be reformed. The General Session will serve as a venue for scholars to share research directions and to strengthen their networks.

GS06 - Protest, Social Movements, Interest Groups

Session Chair: Marisa von Bülow

GS07 - Political Behavior

Session Chair: Daniel Stockemer

This session is welcoming individual paper proposals as well as proposals for coherent panels and roundtables in any field of political behavior including political participation, election studies, political psychology, public opinion, and representation research. Proposals may come from any methodological tradition and may cover any level of analysis (i.e., national, sub-national, or supranational). In keeping with the conference's theme of "Politics in the Age of Transboundary Crises: Vulnerability and Resilience," we are especially calling for proposals that directly engage with the way in which major international disruptions influence the political participation of individuals. For instance, papers could address climate change, cyber terrorism, international migration flows and the COVID-19 pandemic, and the ways in which they have had a profound influence on individuals' means of political engagement and whom they choose to elect, and on campaign dynamics, transnational activism, party competition, and public opinion. The session is also organizing a junior scholar symposium in political behavioral research (i.e., a one-day workshop in which 7–10 graduate students and postdoctoral researchers will present their work and receive extensive feedback from a senior colleague).

GS08 - Political Theory

Chair(s) to be confirmed.

GS09 - Transboundary Mobilization around Gender Equality

Session Co-Chairs: Petra Ahrens and Marian Sawer

The IPSA World Congress theme calls for taking a transboundary approach to the study of politics. Since 1995, the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action has provided a transboundary normative framework for women's rights and gender equality, supported by highly integrated global activist networks and insiders in transnational governance institutions.

The past 25 years, however, have seen an increase in the transboundary organization of anti-gender movements that bring together conservative religious actors and those on the radical right. In the context of rising populism, these transboundary organizations have mobilized against gender ideology, in the name of protecting family values and traditional gender roles.

Similarly, transboundary crises, such as pandemics and climate change, have had contradictory effects. For example, while the COVID-19 crisis highlighted the centrality of care work, mainly carried out by women as unpaid or front-line workers, governmental responses like post-pandemic economic stimulus programs set back progress in achieving gender equality in many regions.

For this session, we invite contributors to explore ambivalent and contradictory mobilization around gender equality and the effects of national and transnational crisis management. We especially encourage proposals addressing mobilization against gender equality agendas and reproductive rights in different regions of the world, the relationship between transboundary organization and local actors, and repertoires of action and resistance.

It is our hope that there will be at least one panel addressing the way in which transboundary regional organizing has supported or contested gender equality agendas in Latin America, while a comparative focus on other regions is more than welcome.

GS10 - Latin American Politics

Session Co-Chairs: Daniel Buquet and Mariana Llanos

This General Session welcomes proposals for complete panels and individual papers on Latin American politics, in any dimension. Proposals should refer to any aspect of the politics (government, theory, foreign policy, political economy, political campaigns, elections, social protests, etc.) of any of the Latin American countries, or provide a cross-national comparison of regional politics, in any dimension. For this General Session, we would like to encourage both Latin American colleagues engaged in scholarly research on the region and Latin Americanist scholars from any country to take this opportunity to delve more deeply into their own research interests, discussing them with regional political scientists. Please note that all general sessions of the World Congress will be held in the official languages of IPSA, namely English and/or French. Colleagues who would like to deliver their papers in Spanish can do so within the Local Organizing Committee (LOC) Sessions.

GS12 - Teaching Political Science in an Era of Disruption

Session Co-Chairs: John Ishiyama and Alison McCartney

The rise of populism and the many political, social, and economic disruptions in recent years have presented a range of challenges to and opportunities for the teaching of political science in universities and colleges around the world. On one level, political science and politics curricula must cover new forms of political activity, the rise of new parties and movements, and new templates of leadership behavior. On another level, scholars must adapt to political contexts in which expertise and established standards of evidence are devalued, while we simultaneously seek to maintain the standards of developing key skills, such as critical thinking about fundamental ideas of justice and equality, and to convey well-researched knowledge about political systems, processes, and power structures.

The General Session on Political Science Teaching aims to provide a forum in which political science educators from different countries and institutions can come together to explore these challenges, share experiences, and present evidence-based teaching practices. We encourage contributions that investigate pedagogical issues and practices in various national, international, or comparative contexts. We also welcome different pedagogical approaches to understanding populism, economic, political, and social changes, and political disruptions as well as the challenges that these present to political science educators. Proposals should highlight areas such as innovative pedagogical practices, active-learning pedagogies, evidence-based outcomes, and civic engagement education.

REFLECTIONS ON THE CONGRESS THEME: THE DEMOCRATIC DEMISE?

Hasret Dikici Bilgin

Chair of the Committee on Organization, Procedure and Awards
Istanbul Bilgi University

Globalization as a concept was all encompassing in academic research from the 1990s until the mid-2000s. The essence of globalization, its impact and dimensions were at the center of work from undergraduate research projects to substantive, interrogative tomes by leading scholars. Policy-makers sought to adapt to its challenges and opportunities: Trade barriers were reduced, global investment pursued relentlessly, and new production technologies encouraged. The concepts of communication, interdependence, investment, economy, and technology along with the expansion of democracy, human rights and liberalism accompanied the discussions around globalization. The end of the Cold War and the demise of the Soviet Union in its immediate aftermath were famously taken by some to mark the ultimate triumph of liberalism. As a corollary, the adoption of liberal political institutions and implementation of market reforms were expected to expand beyond the Western world.

Obviously, not everyone shared this short-lived euphoria. Some, such as the neo-Marxists of the Dependency School, had long been critical of the asymmetrical relations of power between the core hegemonic Western countries and those of the periphery. The turning of the tide in the 1990s with the fall of the Soviet Union not only suggested the ultimate demise of the autonomy of local economies, but also raised concerns such as the potential for cultural globalization. It is not far-fetched to argue that George Ritzer's 1993 book, The McDonaldization of Society, became the essential reading of the globalization skeptics, for good reason. The highly controversial book, though Weberian to the core, voiced the concerns of many in the periphery that "sameness" was becoming global. The "sameness" was not (and still is not) a neutral global process. It connoted a unilateral flow of change from the West to the rest, and a worrisome fading of cultural distinction. This overlap of economic and cultural anxiety planted the seeds for a historical bloc in the Gramscian sense, comprising leftist and rightist critiques of globalization.

Barely a decade after Ritzer's book, the consequences of plural transformations replaced the debates of the sameness of globalization. By the 2020s, scholars and policy-makers prefer other concepts such as "transboundary" and "transnational" over "global(ized)." As the congress theme aptly puts, issues and problems that "traverse state boundaries in an era of intense global connectivity" set the contemporary agenda for both politics and academia. And while there is a direct intellectual line found in the evolution of these debates, the changing choice of concepts have important further connotations. Most especially, the earlier uses of globalization implicitly suggested the transformation of Western lifestyle and institutions into a new and much wider world order, and it was the countries and people in the periphery of the world who were more concerned about its repercussions. The choice in the way of more neutral concepts such as transboundary, I think, now implies the recognition that the challenges posed by global connectivity are likely to outweigh its promises. In turn, this also suggests a significant change in the perceptions of these countries. While the globalization skeptics of the previous decades were mostly from peripheral countries who were concerned with cultural imperialism and the erosion of economic autonomy, now Europe, the US and the wider Western world are gripped by these concerns, though for different reasons. Talk of a democratic recession, the spread of epidemic diseases and food, fuel and housing shortages are very much related to the enormously enhanced global connectivity of the last half-century.

The upcoming World Congress of Political Science in Buenos Aires, with its focus on the evolving world order, provides a timely opportunity to revisit the deep and pervasive political challenges of our time. As political leaders struggle with the imperatives of short-term crisis management of the COVID-19 pandemic, financial turbulence and political violence, long-term global threats such as climate change loom ever larger on the horizon. When IPSA political scientists gather in 2023 for their first in-person congress meeting in five years, they will debate the politics of yesterday, today and tomorrow in an evolving framework that has moved from being defined by globalization to a more uncertain and perhaps nebulous "transboundary" context.

REFLECTIONS ON THE CONGRESS THEME: POLITICAL SCIENCE AS A DISCIPLINE IN THE AGE OF TRANSBOUNDARY CRISES

The International Political Science Association will bring together political scientists from around the world in Argentina in 2023. The congress theme highlights major challenges deeply embedded in world politics using “transboundary” as an umbrella unifying concept. These global challenges are not only exposing deep flaws in political systems, global economic structures, and education processes, they are also exacerbating deficiencies and global inequalities. It will be interesting to identify and discuss the way “transboundary challenges” can rearticulate places and non-places, dominant and subaltern assemblage to cope in this complex world. In the global context, reconsidering place-based struggles for mobility will be especially relevant.

Sense-making has been enriched by challenging the overspecialization of various and eclectic dimensions and crossing disciplinary boundaries (History, Sociology, Anthropology, Psychology, Economics, etc.). This has led to robust theory building and analytical integration, whereas epistemic transboundaries appear as much as a constraining than as an enabling interplay of structure and agency.

Important questions for the discipline of political science arise at this moment. How has the professional community of political scientists strived, and at time compromised, in the negotiation of, and cooperation with, other structures of sense-making, while maintaining essential discipline identity, internal coherence, rigor, fruitfulness and thus resilience? There is a connection between the capacity to apprehend the complexity of the coexistence of logics, and interdisciplinarity and epistemic resilience, and it will be essential that papers at the congress investigate the internal conflicts, compliance, individual or collective bargaining, as well as (re)negotiated orders of explanation and translation operation at work in this process.

Traces of this can be identified in the assessment presented over the years by The World of Political Science Book Series. Nearly twelve years ago, John Trent called for “bringing back to the fore systems theory, behavioral theory, normative theory, historical-institutionalism, critical theory and policy studies [...]. Further rebalancing can be attained by opening ourselves once again to knowledge from other socially relevant disciplines at the same time as we open our students to the real world through periods of practical placement of students in the work environment” (Trent, 2011). How far has this gone today? The world congress presents an opportunity for the discipline, and the profession, to reflect on these major questions and the congress theme especially highlights this intra, inter and transdisciplinary cooperation.

A final word on international collaboration which is also highlighted in the congress theme. Political science is a global discipline and its diversity is its greatest strength. In an academic context, African scholars’ mobility remains relatively unknown and unthought out, reinforcing a form of invisibility of the figures but constitutive of a form of mobility-minorization (Coquery-Vidrovitch, 2006) and impacting the structural declassification of African scientific production in the global order of knowledge. I very much hope that research from universities in African states will feature prominently across the World Congress program in Buenos Aires in 2023.

THE HISTORY OF ARGENTINIAN POLITICAL SCIENCE AND ITS ASSOCIATION

Gustavo Dufour
President, Sociedad
Argentina de Análisis Político
(SAAP)

Academic political studies in Argentina began appearing at the start of the 20th century, with the consolidation of the nation-state. Although still under the umbrella of legal studies, some leading works incorporated the examination of political actors, the functioning of political structures, and even political change, mostly as an extension of suffrage. Surprisingly early developments can also be found, like the publication of the Argentinian Political Sciences Review between 1928 and 1930.

Starting the 1940s, sociology played a role in professionalizing academic life in the social sciences, while new academic programs and institutions emerged in the 60s and 70s to create a modern empirical political science that was in line with global standards and an industrializing national project. However, military coups and political polarization challenged scientific interest as a basis for political analysis, as did the lack of interest in democracy as a political regime, the dismantling of public research spaces, and censorship. It could be said that this scattering of academic production and reproduction was a counter example of the theoretical, methodological, and organizational unification process that behaviorism produced in the United States.

Nevertheless, all this did not prevent Argentinian researchers, several of whom were involved in global academic networks, to produce sharp and original interpretations of the social and political consequences of the capitalist developments particular to Latin America. This was the case, for example, of the most influential Argentinian political scientist, Guillermo O'Donnell, and his first great book, Modernization and Bureaucratic Authoritarianism (1973).

At the beginning of the 1980s, IPSA had a profound impact on Argentinian political science. After attending the 1982 World Congress in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, O'Donnell, Oscar Oszlak, and other leading scholars concluded that the country needed its own national political science association. That year, Oszlak founded the Argentinian Political Analysis Society (its initials in Spanish are SAAP) and became its first president. At that time, there was an Argentinian Political Science Association (AAP), but it was led by lawyers who refused to accept into the institution the new political scientists, reinforcing their belief that there was a need for a new organization under a different name. A few years later, the AAP disappeared.

The transition to democracy in 1983 also ushered in the essential framework for political science practices, and the academic field of political science flourished. The political exiles returned, several undergraduate programs were created (the largest at the Universidad de Buenos Aires), and research returned to universities, although with severe budgetary restrictions.

The second decisive impact provoked by IPSA in Argentina occurred eight years later. Under O'Donnell's presidency, IPSA organized the 1991 World Congress in Buenos Aires. It was a tremendous success that revitalized organizations in the local community, modernized teaching programs and opened up several new research topics and sources of state and private funding. Two years later, in 1993, SAAP started organizing national political science congresses, with both attendance and quality continuously growing, even until today.

Nowadays, the thematic agenda of Argentinian political science is similar to that of any global research institution that includes Latin American countries in their comparative studies. The dominant American and European theories and methods are well known and widely used. Nevertheless, the local political agenda is still an important factor for scholars determining their topics of investigation. For instance, market-oriented reforms in the 1990s led to strong research on political economy and social protest, and the turn to the left in the 2000s led to a thorough study of populism.

THE FLORALIS GENERICA SCULPTURE. LOCATED IN PLAZA DE LAS NACIONES UNIDAS IN BUENOS AIRES.

The Argentinian political science community is now large and vibrant. The country has more than 50 universities teaching political science at the graduate and undergraduate levels, more than 10 peer-reviewed journals, and a strong and widely credible association. In fact, between 1993 and 2021, SAAP organized 15 biannual national conferences in the country's major cities including Buenos Aires, Rosario, Córdoba, Río Cuarto, Mendoza, and Santa Fe. The Revista SAAP, launched in 2002, is probably the best political science journal in the country. Finally, SAAP has also helped enhance the relationship between the local political science community and global colleagues. SAAP's former president, Martín D'Alessandro, currently an IPSA vice-president, was a key actor in these developments.

SAAP is proud to host the 27th IPSA World Congress of Political Science, and it hopes it will become a landmark in our history as a scientific community, as was the case with the 15th IPSA World Congress in 1991. Next year, new generations of Argentinian and Latin American political scientists will have an excellent opportunity to demonstrate the quality and comprehensiveness of our national and regional political science. We sincerely hope that colleagues from all over the world will leave with the same opinion and be encouraged to include our work within the range of their academic interests.

Does the UN Model Still Work? Challenges and Prospects for the Future of Multilateralism

IPSA  AISP

Composed of original articles from academics and policy notes from practitioners, this book attempts to draw up the state of multilateralism through the UN model and identify potential ways to address its challenges and shortcomings. The contributors question the role of multilateralism, sometimes accused of being fragmented, inefficient and unrepresentative, and its impact on global governance, democracy, trade and investment, the environment, and human rights. Since most of the authors are not from the UN system, the content of the contributions provides an external and more neutral assessment of the UN's ability to continue to function today as a serious actor within a global movement in favor of a renewed form of multilateralism.

Publication date: December 22, 2022

In 2023, IPSA, with the financial support of the Konrad Adenauer Foundation (KAS), is publishing an open access volume inspired by the virtual conference to celebrate the 75th anniversary of the founding of the United Nations held in October 2020 in partnership with Concordia University, KAS, and the Greater-Montreal and Quebec branches of the United Nations Association in Canada (UNAC). The conference was officially recognized by the UN as part of the commemoration of its 75th anniversary events and gathered leading experts, diplomats and academics to discuss a range of current themes in international politics. This modern and far-reaching contribution to the international debate on multilateralism will be of particular interest to students, scholars, researchers, negotiators and practitioners (from both non-governmental and intergovernmental organizations) as well as decision-makers and government representatives.

CHINESE ASSOCIATION OF POLITICAL SCIENCE (TAIPEI)

The Chinese Association of Political Science (CAPS) was founded in 1932 in Nanking, the capital of the Republic of China. It continues to hold an academic conference annually, to reward excellent research, and to publish the Chinese Political Science Review, one of the most influential journals of political science in Taiwan.

Despite the pandemic, the former president of the association, Prof. Szue-chin Philip Hsu (National Taiwan University), still held the onsite 2021 annual congress focusing on the impact of technology on security, governance, and development. Nearly 300 participants attended the conference and presented more than 100 papers. Since 2022, Prof. Chin-peng Chu (National Dong Hwa University, NDHU), has been president of CAPS.

On 28-29 October, CAPS held its 2022 annual congress in conjunction with an international conference at NDHU. The former was mainly in Chinese and focus on diversification strategies in the challenge of global decoupling, and the latter was in English and hosted a few international scholars to discuss competition and collaboration between East Asia and the European Union (EU) in the changing global order.

ITALIAN POLITICAL SCIENCE ASSOCIATION

The Italian Political Science Association (SISP) celebrated a return to in-person conferences with its 35th conference at the Sapienza University of Rome, with support from the local department of political sciences, on 8-10 September 2022. More than 400 participants attended the conference, which offered the most panels (126) in the history of the association. The plenary lecture, titled “Myopic Democracy and the Lost Future,” was delivered by Prof. Jan Zielonka (University of Venice – Ca’ Foscari).

SISP is now looking responsive and resilient. Thanks to the efforts of former president Francesca Longo and the Steering Committee, SISP has grown its membership, taking advantage of the long pandemic period to improve its procedures and motivate new cohorts of scholars. Several online events, including the 2020 and 2021 annual conferences, were held and had good attendance levels. SISP now has more than 300 members, with 16 standing groups that organize special events and the panel sections for the annual conference. SISP also took the opportunity to revamp its website (<https://www.sisp.it/>) which also boasts an English version and an improved system to interact with members.

While the 2022 SISP conference attracted a good number of international scholars, the association, under the leadership of its new president, Luca Verzichelli, aims to expand even more on the international scale in the coming years. As English is now the lingua franca of the annual SISP event, an even greater number of panels will be open to non-Italian attendees in 2023. The next SISP annual conference will be held at the Department of Political and International Sciences of the University of Genoa, on 7-9 September 2023.

NEW ZEALAND POLITICAL STUDIES ASSOCIATION

The COVID years have been trying times for the New Zealand Political Studies Association (NZPSA). This year it will once again be holding its annual conference online. The conference, which will be hosted by the political science and public policy program at Waikato University, runs from 29 November to 1 December.

Apart from that, one of the unanticipated outcomes of the COVID years has been a net increase in activity within and connections across the association’s constituent networks. The NZPSA have nine of these sub-networks, organized around themes (IR, Political Theory, NZ Politics, Teaching in Politics, etc.), and since the virus landed in

New Zealand in early 2020, they have become much more active. The NZPSA is looking forward to a future in which these online platforms continue to supplement the benefits of in-person events.

One last item of note. Recently, New Zealand’s Justice Minister announced the composition of an independent panel to review the country’s electoral arrangements. Two members of NZPSA – Associate Professor Maria Bargh (Victoria University of Wellington) and Dr. Lara Greaves (Auckland University), have been selected to serve, and the NZPSA looks forward to the opportunity to contribute through them to this important democratic work.

POLISH POLITICAL SCIENCE ASSOCIATION

The Polish Political Science Association (PPSA), in conjunction with the Central European Political Science Association (CEPSA) and the Institute of Political Science, University of Warmia and Mazury in Olsztyn, organizes the in-person 25th CEPSA annual conference in Olsztyn (Poland), on 17-19 November 2022, entitled “Challenges to Democracy: Political Processes in Central and Eastern Europe.”

Every three years since 2009, the PPSA has co-organized the Polish Political Science Congress. The last Congress in Lublin, in 2018, attracted more than 700 participants from 28 scientific institutions. Due to the pandemic and a one-year delay, the 5th Congress, entitled “Politics of (Dis) Order,” was held at the University of Wrocław on 21–23 September 2022.

The PPSA would like to extend an invitation to at least two international major scientific conferences in 2023.

Every year in early February, the annual conference Europe of the 21st Century takes place in Słubice at the Collegium Polonicum of the Adam Mickiewicz University on the German-Polish border (it will be the 23rd edition in 2023). In addition to the national political science congresses, this is the most important political science event in Poland and in the region. Prior to the pandemic, more than 300 researchers from Poland and a dozen countries around the world, mainly from Central and Eastern Europe, participated. Traditionally, a meeting of the PPSA Executive Committee takes place during this conference.

Every year, the International Asian Congress is held in Toruń in May under the patronage of the PPSA and others. It is the most important scientific, cultural, and business event dedicated to Asia in Central Europe, bringing together researchers, experts, politicians, diplomats, and businesspeople (over 600 participants from more than 20 countries). In 2023, it will be the 10th Jubilee Congress (<https://kongresazja.pl/index.php/en/mission>).

For other conferences in Poland in late 2022 and in 2023, please see the PPSA website (<http://www.ptnp.org.pl/index.php/en/>), (in English, Russian, Italian, and Turkish).

TURKISH POLITICAL STUDIES ASSOCIATION

The Turkish Political Science Association (Siyasi İlimler Türk Derneği, SİTD), officially established in 1973, was founded by a group of prominent social scientists in the late 1950s. SİTD founders focused on developing political science as a distinct discipline and an academic department in Turkish universities by publishing articles about state-of-the-art research at the global level and translating seminal books for Turkish readers. The lack of stable public funding and episodes of political unrest prevented the organization from pursuing nationwide membership and regular activities for an extended period. SİTD has been a member of IPSA since 1964. Since then, its members have participated in IPSA's activities and served in various capacities in the IPSA organization, the most notable being the presidency of İlter Turan (2016–2018).

In the early 2000s, the SİTD office was relocated from Ankara to İstanbul, and regular conferences for graduate students in political science marked the resurgence of the organization's activities. Despite the brief interval during 2020-2021 due to the global pandemic, SİTD has continued to organize these conferences. In fall 2022, the 18th Graduate Conference was held at İzmir Katip Çelebi University.

The first National Congress of Political Science in Turkey also took place in the fall. Organized by SİTD, it was held at the Santral Campus of İstanbul Bilgi University. Information regarding the congress can be found on SİTD's website (<https://www.siyasiilimler.org.tr/>).

URUGUAYAN POLITICAL STUDIES ASSOCIATION

The Uruguayan Political Science Association (AUCIP) will hold its 8th congress in Montevideo on 20-22 July 2023, right after the 27th World Congress of Political Science in Buenos Aires.

The call for proposals can be found at aucip.org.uy.

1. How does business in different industries impact the end beneficiaries of development processes (such as labour, local communities, broader population, local consumers, and the environment)?
2. How do governments regulate business models and mechanisms for promoting development?

The opening ceremony had professors Hosuk Lee-Makiyama, Director of the European Centre for International Political Economy, and Dr Tayyab Mahmud as keynote speakers.
